Repealing the Fire-Escape Law.

The Board of Trade, the Business Men's Association, and more than one group of business men specially organized for the purpose, have arranged to appear before the Congressional committees on the District of Columbia and urge the repeal of the so-called fire-escape law. They have a good case. The law is through a beautiful park to that manifestly harsh and its requirements are open to serious question whether or not they will operate to give any tenant, owner, or insurance company the slightest advantage. The appeal is to reasonable men. Therefore the committees ought, ordinarily, to win their

But winning their case is not so much a matter of a just cause, at hesitate between such alternatives, this juncture, as of a proper campaign. The session is nearly over. The ealendars of both houses are jammed. Appropriation bills, publie building bills, and private bills of political importance are all fighting for a chance. The hard thing will be, not to impress the two Distriet committees with the advisability of the repeal, but to get the bill which is to effect the repeal out of the two committees and before the two houses. Unless that is Next they will follow the measure closely until it has been taken from the table and acted upon. They win find little or no opposition to it in Congress. But they will find a great deal of difficulty in getting the minute or so of time required to get it passed.

But the advantage gained by the Capital, the Survey, the Congress, by the whole nation, is large nevertheless.

There are the considerations of economy and business administration. At present the nation pays out as rent for this pureau the interest at the Government's borrowing rate on $1,800,000. As the total friendly official, whose patience with outlay for the new home is to be but $1,200,000, the business sense in the measure is manifest. Furthermore, the new quarters will be especially adapted to the technical and peculiar requirements of survey labor. The chief need is plenty of light. The survey is now in a building which provides so little light that the force works in daily danger of injuring its eyesight. Then, special rooms should be provided for the topographers, photographers, engravers, and the several divisions which work with microscopes. The present quarters are more, the new quarters will be esscopes. The present quarters are not adapted to this work, and never partment of the service where "sican be made adaptable to them.
